Location

Quarto dei Mille is a residential district of the Levant of Genoa, overlooking the sea and between the districts Sturla and Quinto. Originally the official name was Quarto al Mare, the name was then changed in 1911 in honor of the expedition of the Thousand led by Giuseppe Garibaldi, which began in this town on the night between 5 and 6 May 1860 directed to Marsala.

The town owes its name to its location on the Via Aurelia in Roman times (in Quartum Milium from the centre of Genoa). The Via Antica Romana (on the route of Aurelia Romana) ran along the upstream district of the coastal area.

The area was once inhabited by farmers, fishermen and was home to holiday palaces.

Services

In addition to the railway station, the district is well served by public transport and major services. Also you can reach the sea on foot in a few minutes and take advantage of private bathing establishments or the public beach.
